In Norway, a massive complex buried for thousands of years under a fjord was accidentally discovered by two oil rig scuba divers (Eirik and Jack) after a diamond drill bit was obliterated by the outer shell of the facility. They discovered an entrance, entered the facility, and soon realized that the technology was too advanced to have been created in our time. Instead of telling the authorities, they took upon themselves to return over the years to map and explore further. They also realized the strange behavior of the facility's security system when it prevented Jack from operating some equipment and accessing some areas. Follow Eirik, Jack, and others as they negotiate national and international issues in an effort to understand the facility, its Builders, and its purpose.
